

Loretta Goggi

Spoken Languages: english, german

Studies and Seminars:

L. Goggi is an artist par excellence, a woman with true artistic talent, who can sing, dance, entertain, perform, host television shows and even do impersonations. There is no other woman like her on the Italian scene, because while it's true that there are good singers, actors and TV hosts / entertainers, none of them can put everything together as well as Loretta does.

Ms. Goggi was born in Rome, where she took her first steps into the world of entertainment as a young girl. When she was 10 years old her parents accompanied her to an audition for "Sotto Processo (On Trial)", the TV drama directed by A. G. Majano, whose leading actors were the famous I. Occhini and A. Lupo. She got the role, and that marked the beginning of a big career as a television actress that led her to perform in almost every major TV drama of the 60s, including: "The Citadel" alongside A. Lupo, "The Stars Look Down" with G. Giannini, "Les Misérables", "The Adventures of Inspector Maigret" with G. Cervi and "Life of Dante" with G. Albertazzi. Between one drama and another she cut her first record, "If You Try" (the theme song for the film "Le sang à la tête (Blood to the Head)" with J. Gabin), a song written by N. Fidenco and released, with the simple title "Loretta", by RCA. Along with her acting career, she also worked as a voice actress: she dubbed both O. Muti and A. Belli in their first films; Kim Darby in "True Grit", a western with J. Wayne; K. Ross in "Tell Them Willie Boy Is Here", and many other Italian and foreign actresses. Loretta was also the first voice actor to dub Tweety Pie, the famous cartoon canary, who Sylvester the Cat (dubbed at the time by G. Proietti) is constantly hunting.

Her first big break came in 1969 when A.G. Majano cast her in the role of Joan Sadley for the TV series based on the novel "The Black Arrow" by R.L. Stevenson, alongside A. Reggiani and A. Foa. This drama kept viewers all over Italy literally glued to the TV and became in time a real "cult" drama, remembered as one of the biggest television hits of all time. Its success made Loretta enormously popular. As a result, she did her first important magazine covers, she starred in the film "Zingara (Gypsy)" with Bobby Solo and she got her first recording contract with Durium (one of the labels that have made history in Italian music), for which she recorded her first official 45 released with her full name, entitled "Fino all'ultimo (Until the End)". The song was presented on the TV show "Incontri Musicali (Musical Encounters)" directed by M.Corgnati, on which Loretta appeared for the first time as a presenter and impersonator.

In the early 70's Loretta's career turned more and more towards variety and entertainment in general. She was chosen to present several TV specials, including "Incontro con" (Meet) L. Battisti", she was the anchorwoman for several radio shows and at the same time, she continued her singing career, recording a new single for Durium entitled "Cibù Ciba", written by Paolo Limiti. In 1971 she had another great opportunity: she was a guest on a radio show hosted by P. Baudo and, almost by accident, she did imitations of several famous singers during the recording of the episode. Baudo was delighted; he sensed the young woman's talent and invited her to be the co-host of the television show "La Freccia d'Oro (The Golden Arrow)". This was followed by a new record entitled "(Ti Chiedo Scusa (I'm Sorry))" and then, by guest appearances on several successful TV shows, sometimes together with her younger sister, Daniela, an actress appearing in successful TV dramas ("David Copperfield", "The Stars Look Down", etc..). In the summer of the same year Loretta recorded a new song "Io Sto Vivendo Senza Te (I'm Living Without You)" with which she participated in "Il Disco Per L'Estate (The Song for the Summer)". Then she recorded a children's song that was sold along with two dolls named "Cico" and "Bum". In 1972 Baudo wanted Loretta as his co-host on the show "Canzonissima". RAI management was skeptical but after testing just one episode, with F. Franchi, entitled "Theater 10", they confirmed her for the Saturday night slot. The idea worked: L.

Goggi became the darling of TV audiences. The show's theme song "Taratapunzi-e (Come Away With Me)" was one of the biggest hits of the year. Her multifaceted talent earned her a "Maschera d'Argento (Silver Mask)" award, major recognition for a TV artist.

The year 1973 was an important one for Loretta's career: artistic association with A. Noschese for the television program "Formula 2". She shared space 50-50 with one of the greatest impersonators in the history of Italian television and proved herself to be - not only as an extraordinary an impersonator as he was - but also a very good dancer (in choreography by D.Lurio) and a true character actress with a thousand voices and a thousand faces. As part of the show, she also had the opportunity to sing new songs which were collected in the album that bears the program title and that marked the end of her recording contract with Durium. In the summer of 1974, Loretta also took a recital on tour through Italy, stopping several times at the Bussola in Viareggio, the historic room where the singer Mina made her first appearances.

After a period of voluntary departure from the scene, in 1975 Loretta signed a new contract with CBS-Sugar and returned, singing two songs "Loretta With an 'O'" (the Italian version of a hit by L. Minnelli) and "Dirtelo, Non Dirtelo" (To Tell You Or Not)", a song that would become one of her greatest hits; the song started out a bit slowly, but repeated a few months after its release in the musical "Dal Primo Momento Che T'Ho Visto (From the First Moment I Saw You)" where she was flanked by M. Ranieri, it became a real hit record.

In the following years, Loretta decided to focus on singing; produced by music bigwigs like T. Savio she began to present herself as a real singer, with songs that become hits (such as "Ancora Innamorati (Still In Love)" and together with Daniela she took a show entitled "Go & Go" on the road for two years, traveling all over Italy. The show's title song "Domani (Tomorrow)" became a hit. As a pair, Daniela and Loretta were very appealing so RAI decided star them in "Il Ribaltone (Flip Flop)", a forerunner of the current shows broadcast from the Salone Margherita Bagaglino, made up of music, satire, comedy and dance, all directed by A.Falqui. The songs Loretta and Daniela sang on "Il Ribaltone" were included in an album with the same name and a single, "Estoy Bailando", was released exclusively for the Spanish and Latin American markets. In 1979, her artistic collaboration with Daniela dissolved and Loretta became the first lady of Italian TV - presenting the first "Fantastico (Cool)" broadcast, combined with the Italian Lottery, alongside H. Parisi and B. Grillo, directed by E.Trapani. Loretta changed labels and began a fruitful relationship with WEA for which she recorded what would become their leading products. From "L'Aria di Sabato Sera (The Air of Saturday Night)" onward, one hit followed another until "Maledetta Primavera (Damn Spring)", a song that has become an Italian pop classic. Loretta sang it at the 1981 Sanremo Festival, winning second place.

The 80's were golden years. The huge success of "Maledetta Primavera" (1 million copies sold worldwide) was just the beginning of a period of great satisfaction for Loretta, who was hosting the first variety show on Rete (Channel) 5 ("Hello Goggi"), starring with G.Proietti in the musical "They're Playing Our Song" and, for the first time, she was the single TV host for the two episodes of the musical review "Gondola d'Oro (Golden Gondola)" in Venice. In 1982, Loretta returned to radio, presenting the show "Effetto Musica (Music Effect)" for Radio RAI, and continued to sing, making a new album entitled "Pieno d'Amore (Full of Love)" that she promoted on major television shows at the time, including "Domenica In", "Premiatissima" and "Un Milione al Secondo (A Million a Second)". In 1983 she made a risky new choice that proved to be a winner: "Gran Varietà (Great Variety)", another pioneering program for the new private channel Retequattro. Loretta was joined by P. Panelli and L. Salce, who was also director of the program. In the fall of 1983, she returned to Mamma RAI with a novelty: "Loretta Goggi in Quiz" which, as the title states, is a quiz show, but one presented by L. Goggi and therefore bursting with music, entertainment, gossip at the piano with composer M. Remigi, dance duets with partner G. Brezza (the show's choreographer) and songs from her repertoire.

The show was a hit, winning the Telegatto Award, and for the first and only time in history Loretta agreed to repeat it in the 1984-1985 television season, this time directed by G. Brezza, still with M. Remigi and with F. Fazio making his debut as a regular guest on a primetime RAI broadcast.

In 1986, after almost a year off from the scene and occasional guest shots on a program with L. Rispoli entitled "Il Tappeto Volante (The Flying Carpet)" and on "Domenica In" with Damato-Gardini, she made a big comeback on TV as a host. Loretta presented the Sanremo Festival - the first woman to do it alone - and also sang the theme song, "Io Nascerò (I Will Be Born)", a song by Mango which went gold and marked the beginning of a collaboration with the Fonit-Cetra label. Immediately after the Festival, Loretta helmed the variety show "Il Bello della Diretta (The Beauty of Live TV)", with novice A. Cecchi Paone. The show featured satire, psychological testing and comic moments during which she presented a new album "C'è Poesia (There's Poetry)", an album containing both new songs and covers interpreted in duets with their composers, to date her best-selling album. The tight collaboration with the RAI continued, in ensuing years, with "Canzonissime" (1987), a program dedicated to the history of Italian music, "Ieri, Goggi e Domani (Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow)", an early-evening format of entertainment and current events, and "Via Teulada 66", a noon show, all written together with G. Brezza, who directed. Each program was linked to a new album: after the first "C'è Poesia" a second volume was released, "C'è Poesia 2", followed by "Donna Io Donna Tu (I'm a Woman, So Are You)" and "Punti di Vista (Viewpoints)".

The 90's. After "Via Teulada 66" Loretta decided to take a rest and she stayed away from the artistic scene for about two years, returning in spring 1991 on the Telemontecarlo channel with the late-evening show "Festa di Compleanno (Birthday Party)". She also released a new album, "Si faran' canzone", produced by M. Lavezzi. However, due to a series of misunderstandings, production errors and distribution mistakes, she decided to call it a day (hopefully not permanently) with the music business.

Having wrapped up the experience with Telemontecarlo, Loretta moved away from the scene again and made only rare TV appearances in the early 90's. These included "Serata d'Onore (Night of Honor)" in 1992, and "Il Canzoniere delle Feste (The Party Songbook)" and "Primadonna", a program dedicated to women conducted by O. Colli, both in 1993. Loretta then made a big theatrical comeback, thanks to providential intervention by P. Garinei, who convinced her in 1995 to team up with J.Dorelli in "Bobbi Sa Tutto (Bobbi Knows Everything)", a 4-act show written by L. Magni, I. Fiastri, Age and Scarpelli, Benvenuti and De Bernardi, with music by G. Ferrio, directed by Garinei himself. The show toured for two years, selling out theaters all over Italy - a major success for this artistic duo, which was reconstituted in the TV drama "Due Per Tre (Two By Three)", broadcast on Channel 5 within Buona Domenica. In 1999, after several TV appearances, including "Innamorati Pazzi (Mad About You)" and four editions of "Viva Napoli" as co-host alongside M. Bongiorno, Loretta returned anew to the theater with "Hello, Dolly!", the famous American musical successfully performed by great American entertainment icons like E. Merman, C. Channing and B. Streisand. Loretta, of course, played Dolly, and P. Ferrari played the role of her sidekick, H. Vandergelder. Four years of tours throughout Italy, millions in box office receipts, sold-out theaters, long lines for tickets, the CD reissued three times: in short, Loretta the DIVA in every sense!

In 2004 a new theater project, this time directed by L.Wertmuller, for whom she created the role of a quirky, dynamic and vibrant director who gathers together a group of aspiring actors and trains them, in order to stage a play by Shakespeare. The result of this was "Molto Rumore - Senza Rispetto - Per Nulla (Much Ado - With No Respect - About Nothing", a sort of musical reworking of the masterpiece by the great English playwright. The show premiered in Verona at the end of July and then toured Italy from October to April, always with rousing success.

In 2012/2013 she was in the cast of the movie "Pazze di Me (Crazy About Me)" directed by F. Brizzi. In 2015 it is in the fiction of R.Donna and T.Aristarco entitled "Come fai sbagli" and in 2016, Cinzia Th Torrini returns to direct her in the Raiuno series of the great success "Sorelle". In 2018 he worked as a co-star in F. Mandelli's film "Just a Minute" and was the narrator of "The Star of Andrea and Tati". He also works with his sister Daniela on the short film "Sogni" by A. Longoni and in "Pezzi Unici" by C.Th Torrini. Nel 2019 is in "Burraco Fatale-Cuori, Quadri, Fiori, Picche" directed by G.Gamba and "Glassboy-II bambino di vetro" directed by S. Rossi. In March 2020 she will be in "Ritorno al crimine" directed by M. Bruno and in "Rido perchè ti amo" directed by P. Ruffini. She will be in "Fino all'ultimo

battito" by C. Th Torrini
